THE FUTURE OF DERMATOLOGY

Tomorrow, The Australasian College of Dermatologists (ACD) will open its 51st Annual Scientific Meeting (ASM) at the Gold Coast Convention and Exhibition Centre.

President of the ACD, Dr Andrew Miller says: “This year’s conference will focus on the future of dermatology. I invite all College members and medical professionals with an interest in dermatology to join us at the ASM on the Gold Coast.”

The meeting program will feature international dermatologist speakers, Professor Alan Irvine from Ireland, Professor Peter Wolf from Austria; and Professor June Robinson and Associate Professor Jeremy Bordeaux from the United States of America. The event will cover melanoma, Mohs surgery, cosmetic dermatology, research and various other skin conditions.

Meeting Convenor Professor H Peter Soyer says: “Through our work in translational research on melanoma and skin cancer with The University of Queensland (UQ), I thought that the ASM could benefit from having sessions on these topics. Together with fellow Convenor, Dr Salvatore Scuderi, we have put together what promises to be a forward-thinking and engaging program.”

Dr Miller says: “Only 500 metres from the white sands of Broadbeach, the Gold Coast Convention and Exhibition Centre is Australia’s largest regional convention centre. We look forward to seeing you on the Gold Coast.”
